Ryan Zinke Predicts US Offshore Oil Production Will 'Begin To Decline'.

The Daily Caller (9/26, Bastasch) reports that Interior Secretary Zinke said at the National Clean Energy Week summit that he "expects offshore oil production to 'remain steady and then begin to decline' because onshore drilling, particularly in shale formations, is much more lucrative for companies." Zinke said, "It is more expensive to produce energy offshore, and it's riskier."

Ryan Zinke Confronts Protesters During Clean Energy Speech: 'Please Sit Down'. The Washington Examiner (9/26, Siegel) reports that Interior Secretary Zinke "confronted and chided protesters who interrupted him" yesterday "as he delivered a speech on the Trump administration's commitment to cleaner fuels as part of its 'energy dominance' agenda." Two protesters interrupted the speech by Zinke "at the National Press Club in Washington, D.C. recognizing National Clean Energy Week." One protestor "referenced Zinke's ties to the fossil fuel industry. Another, off topic, complained about Trump's Supreme Court nominee Brett Kavanaugh." Zinke said, "That is so inappropriate. Please sit down. ... It is never nice to be rude." He "used the disruption to riff off-the-cuff against the polarization of politics."

Also reporting is the Daily Caller (9/26, Bastasch).

Badger-Two Medicine Stakeholders Watching Zinke's Next Move.

The Missoulian \(MT\) (9/26, Reilly) reports that "following Monday's court rulings reinstating oil and gas drilling leases in the Badger-Two Medicine area," observers are watching to see how Interior Secretary Zinke will respond. However, Zinke has "given scant indication of his next steps." Asked to comment on "either the case or the possibility of a monument designation, Zinke spokesperson Heather Swift referred the Missoulian back to the 2017 report recommending Badger-Two Medicine's status as a monument."

FWP Recommends 4 Areas For Protection By Interior Department.

The Billings \(MT\) Gazette (9/26) reports that "Montana Fish, Wildlife and Parks has recommended four priority migration corridors to the Department of Interior for protection at the agency's request." Interior Secretary Zinke "announced in a Monday press release that the department will begin the next steps in the conservation of these big game migration corridors and winter ranges in 11 western states." Zinke said in the statement, "When it comes to wildlife and habitat conservation, we all know that animals go where animals want to go, and more often than not that's dependent upon natural features like watersheds, rather than whether land is owned by the BLM, state, or private landowners. Which is why we are starting to manage habitat at a bigger landscape scale. My goal is healthy herds for American hunters and wildlife watchers, and this feedback will help identify and protect migration corridors for iconic big game species like elk, mule deer and antelope. We've already seen early success working with the State of Wyoming, and now I'm looking forward to working with 10 more states to protect even more habitat."

Hopi Tribe Urges U.S. To Save Arizona Navajo Coal Plant From Closing.

Reuters (9/26, DiSavino) reports the Hopi Tribe has “called on the U.S. government to explore options to keep the Navajo coal-fired power plant in Arizona in service after a potential buyer of the plant decided not to pursue ownership.” Middle River Power “said last week it will no longer pursue a bid for the facility in part because of difficulty finding enough buyers for the plant’s power, according to local news.” In a statement Hopi Tribe vice chairman Clark Tenakhongva said, “The United States Government must either continue to buy power from (Navajo), or provide the Hopi Tribe with support necessary to avoid an economic catastrophe.”

Walker Native Scot Storm Wins Federal Duck Stamp Contest.

The Walker \(MN\) Pilot-Independent (9/26) reports that an artist from Freeport, Minn. has won the 2018 Federal Duck Stamp Art Contest. Scot Storm’s acrylic painting of a wood duck and decoy will be made into the 2019-2020 Federal Migratory Bird Hunting and Conservation Stamp. Interior Secretary Zinke said, “Waterfowl hunters are some of our nation’s most passionate wildlife conservationists. More than 80 years after it was established, sales of the Duck Stamp to hunters, bird watchers, outdoor enthusiasts and collectors have raised more than $1 billion to conserve nearly six million acres of habitat for birds and other wildlife and provide countless opportunities for hunting and recreation on our public lands.”

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

One Step Closer: BIA Issues Environmental Statement On Eagle Mountain Casino Move.

The Porterville \(CA\) Recorder (9/26) reports that “the Tule River Indian Tribe moved closer to the approval of the Eagle Mountain Casino relocation with the issuance by the Bureau of Indian Affairs of its draft environmental impact statement (EIS) on the proposed relocation.” The BIA “issued its Notice of Availability informing the public of the release of draft EIS and commencing the 45-day comment period.”

Bureau Of Indian Education

Assistant Secretary Sweeney Announces $74.2 Million In Funding For Design-Build Contracts For Two New School Buildings.

KBKW-AM Aberdeen, WA (9/26, Haviland) reports that Assistant Secretary for Indian Affairs Tara Mac Lean Sweeney has announced “that the Blackwater Community School, located within the Gila River Indian Community in Coolidge, Ariz., will receive $30.1 million dollars, and the Quileute Tribe will receive $44.1 million dollars for the Quileute Tribal School located on Quileute reservation in La Push, Wash., to award design-build contracts for new school buildings.” Sweeney said, “Today is a great day for Native education at Indian Affairs. I am excited for the next phase of this process to initiate for these schools. I appreciate everyone involved with these projects from Indian Affairs, Bureau of Indian Education, the schools, and tribal communities for their dedication to take these schools from an idea to the world-class buildings that they will become.”

Bureau Of Land Management

BLM OKs Utah Oil Shale Utilities Right Of Way.

The Grand Junction \(CO\) Daily Sentinel (9/26, Webb) reports that the Bureau of Land Management yesterday “said it has approved a proposed utility right of way for a northeast Utah oil shale project.” The decision “facilitates the supply of utilities to Enfit American Oil’s South Project, and transport of produced oil from it.” Enfit is “seeking to develop a 50,000-barrel-a-day project to produce oil from shale on private land and minerals owned by the company.”

Bureau Of Reclamation

Bureau Of Reclamation Awards Nearly $76 Million For Cle Elum Dam Work.

KPQ-AM Seattle (9/25, Rounce) reports that the Bureau of Reclamation “awarded a $75,967,000 contract on Sept. 17 to Spokane’s Garco Construction, Inc., for construction services at Cle Elum Dam.” Project Manager Richard Visser said, “The fish passage project is a vital partnership with the Yakama Nation and the State of Washington to restore ecological connectivity and natural production of salmon. The construction of a helix, gate, and intake will provide a safe downstream passage from the reservoir to the Cle Elum River for juvenile salmon, including sockeye.”

Fish And Wildlife Service

Republicans Seek Widespread Changes To The Endangered Species Act.

The AP (9/26) reports, “Galvanized by court rulings protecting grizzly bears and gray wolves, congressional Republicans on Wednesday launched a push for sweeping changes to the Endangered Species Act despite strong objections from Democrats and wildlife advocates who called the effort a ‘wildlife extinction package.’” Senate Environment and Public Works Committee Chairman John Barrasso (R-WY) “said he preferred broad changes to the act rather than legislation on individual species.” However, “whether the GOP proposals ultimately succeed could hinge on who controls Congress next year.” Barrasso “said he did not expect the Senate to act on pending proposals to overhaul the act until after the November midterm election.”

State Congressman Applauds Vote To Remove Federal Protections For Wolves. KCPQ-TV Seattle (9/26, Cihon) reports that Congress is “considering removing gray wolves from the federal list of endangered and threatened species, potentially opening them up to more hunting outside of Washington state.” House Bill 6784, or the “Manage Our Wolves Act,” passed out of the House Committee on Natural Resources on Wednesday. Rep. Dan Newhouse (R-WA) “praised the move, saying delisting wolves would give management back to the states.”

The SCOTUS And The Frog.

Politico (9/26, Tamborrino) reports that the Supreme Court’s “October term begins with some high-profile environmental cases that weigh the federal government’s powers to protect endangered species and regulate mining...and the first one on the docket is on the endangered dusky gopher frog.” According to the article, “the case, Weyerhaeuser Company v. Fish and Wildlife Service, digs into the reach of the controversial Endangered Species Act as it pertains to the 2012 designation of critical habitat for the endangered frog around one pond in Mississippi.”

Also reporting is Vice (9/26, Fidel, Sterbenz).

Airport In A Wildlife Refuge? State-backed Plan Shocks Conservationists, Scientists.

The New Orleans Times-Picayune (9/26, Baurick) reports that Louisiana leaders “hope to do what conservationists say is unthinkable – pave over part of Elmer’s Island Wildlife Refuge to build a commercial airport servicing small jets and private planes.” According to the article, “an airport lease agreement proposing two runways, an air traffic control tower, terminal and hangars was quietly approved by the state Department of Wildlife and Fisheries last month.” The agreement shocked “many wildlife scientists familiar with the refuge, who worry the airport would harm critically important bird habitat on a coastline that’s rapidly disappearing under the encroaching sea.”

Anglers Barred From Popular Fishing Spot After Gators Get Aggressive.

The Palm Beach \(FL\) Post (9/26) reports that “a popular fishing spot in the Loxahatchee National Wildlife Refuge will be temporarily off limits to anglers after alligators

The AP (9/26) reports that “a bow hunter who killed a moose on the Blackfeet Indian Reservation reported shooting and killing a grizzly bear that attacked him.” Blackfeet Fish and Wildlife Director Dona Rutherford “says the man killed the moose on Monday and was preparing to move the animal when he was attacked by the bear.” The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service is “investigating because grizzly bears are listed as a threatened species under the Endangered Species Act.”

New River Gorge Park Plan Gains Support.

The Williamson \(WV\) Daily News (9/26, Steelhammer) reports that “a plan to make New River Gorge National River a full-fledged national park is gaining momentum in communities surrounding the 72,808-acre tract of canyons, cliffs, whitewater rapids and wooded plateaus.” According to the article, “in recent weeks, resolutions calling for changing the New River Gorge’s designation from national river to national park – while not changing the way it currently operates – have been approved by city and county governments, tourism agencies and development boards along the 53-mile-long stretch of parkland.”

The Wausau \(WI\) Daily Herald (9/26, BeMiller) reports that “the U.S. House of Representatives passed a resolution Tuesday urging the Department of the Interior to add Rib Mountain to the National Register of Historic Places.” The measure, sponsored by Rep. Sean Duffy (R-WI), “points to legend that says Rib Mountain was [Paul] Bunyan’s final resting place.” Duffy said in a statement, “Paul Bunyan was a larger than life figure who still embodies the frontier spirit and an important part of Wisconsin’s history.”

Jared Huffman that was unanimously approved by the House of Representatives, with environmental groups divided over the issue.” The bill would “require the Secretary of Interior to issue 20-year permits to the long-standing family-operated beef and dairy ranches in the scenic Marin County seashore managed by the National Park Service.” The bill also “orders the government agency to manage the seashore’s famed tule elk herd to keep the grazing animals separate from the ranches and dairies.”

Sumner High School Building Plan Awaits Park Service Approval.

. The Ellsworth \(ME\) American (9/26, Hauptman) reports that “the next step in construction of a new building for Sumner Memorial High School is approval from the National Park Service to use land that it oversees.” Regional School Unit 24 (RSU 24) Superintendent Mike Eastman said, “A big milestone in this project is the site application. The site we chose was purchased with National Park Service money. We need permission from them to build on it, and that proposal is still pending approval.” According to the article, “a section of where the new building will be constructed, just beyond the school’s baseball field, was previously purchased with grant money from the National Park Service as part of a program to build parks and athletic fields for local communities.”

The Jackson Hole \(WY\) News & Guide (9/26, Cottier) reports last Saturday, on National Public Lands Day, “a small band of outdoors lovers helped with renovation projects in Grand Teton National Park.” Angela Timby, “the park’s trails volunteer coordinator, organized the event.” She said, “With the increase in visitation and the limits on our resources, it’s extremely valuable to have support from volunteers.”

US Geological Survey

Climate Change Not Main Driver Of Amphibian Decline.

Laboratory Equipment (9/26) reports that “while a warming climate in recent decades may be a factor in the waning of some local populations of frogs, toads, newts and salamanders, it cannot explain the overall steep decline of amphibians, according to researchers.” David Miller, lead researcher and associate professor of wildlife population ecology in Penn State’s College of Agricultural Sciences, said that “after analyzing many years of data for 81 North American amphibian species including more than 500,000 observations collected at more than 5,000 sites in 86 study areas by a broad coalition of herpetologists, it is clear a warming climate is not the primary driver in their disappearance.” Erin Muths, a scientist at the U.S. Geological Survey and a co-lead on the project, “believes that the cause of declines comes down to a suite of local factors.” She said, “It depends on the location whether habitat loss, disease, contaminants, climate, or a combination of these local factors is the culprit. Amphibians are challenged by a range of stressors that may be unique to location but in combination are leading to wide-range declines.”

Opinion Pieces

Legislative Package By The Western Caucus Needed To Bring Improvements To Endangered Species Act.

For the “Congress” blog of The Hill (9/26), Reps. Andy Biggs (R-AZ) and Paul Gosar (R-AZ) write that “the Congressional Western Caucus recently introduced a series of bills to modernize the Endangered Species Act of 1973(ESA).” They note that “one part of this package includes our bill, the LIST Act of 2018, which makes a number of improvements to bring the ESA into the 21st century.” The lawmakers argue that “the Western Caucus ESA modernization package is long overdue and will help species that are actually threatened or endangered to increase in population while also ensuring listing and delisting decisions are made as a result of the best available science – not as a result of special-interest litigation or agendas.”

As he chaired the UN Security Council Wednesday, President Trump accused China of trying to interfere in the midterm elections because it opposes his trade policies. Media coverage of Trump’s claim is relatively heavy, but it is largely negative, with most reports pointing out that he offered no evidence to support it.

The CBS Evening News (9/26, story 7, 0:10, Glor) reported Trump “accused China of wanting him to lose the next election” and said in his news conference that “he may no longer be friends with Chinese President Xi Jinping.” The AP (9/26, Miller, Lemire) says Trump “made his accusation against the backdrop of the special counsel’s investigation into Russian interference in the last election to help him and amid concerns that this November’s elections also could be vulnerable.” However, the White House “provided scant evidence of anything akin to the level of Russia’s meddling in the 2016 presidential election.” Asked what evidence he had, Trump said there was “plenty” but “didn’t provide details.” The Wall Street Journal (9/26, Salama, Volz) also points out that the President provided no details or evidence to support his accusation. Andrea Mitchell reported on NBC Nightly News (9/26, story 6, 1:45, Holt) that the timing of the accusation “appears tied to his trade war with China, with the US slapping tariffs on $200 billion of Chinese exports this week.”

The Daily Caller (9/26, Enjeti) reports, “This is not the first time Trump has accused China of attempting to meddle in the election.” Similarly, the New York Times (9/26, Landler) reports that Trump “has accused the Chinese of election meddling before, but never so bluntly or in such a high-profile international setting.”

Reuters (9/26, Bayoumy, Nichols) quotes Trump as saying, “China has been attempting to interfere in our upcoming 2018 election, coming up in November. Against my administration.” Reuters adds that he “made no reference to suspected Russian meddling in the 2016 U.S. election and provided no evidence for his allegation about China.” USA Today (9/26, Shesgreen, Fritze) also says Trump “did not offer any specific evidence of China’s meddling,” but adds that in a tweet later Wednesday, “he highlighted a four-page advertorial that ran Sunday in the Des Moines (Iowa) Register newspaper.” Trump tweeted, “China is actually placing propaganda ads in the Des Moines Register and other papers, made to look like news. That’s because we are beating them on Trade, opening markets, and the farmers will make a fortune when this is over!” The New York Post (9/26, Moore) also says Trump “followed up on his claim” with the tweet highlighting the Chinese ads.

To Politico (9/26, Shamon), Trump’s comment was “a striking assertion” that “echoed recent remarks by White House national security adviser John Bolton, who pointed the finger at China without giving concrete evidence of Beijing’s interference with U.S. elections.” Axios (9/26, Vavra) reports that Bolton “has previously said the government is concerned about Chinese interference in U.S. elections, but the administration has not yet provided specific evidence of direct tampering or misinformation campaigns of the sort Russia pursued in 2016.”

The Washington Times (9/26, Boyer, Taylor) reports that Trump later indicated “that he was referring in part to China’s retaliatory tariffs against U.S. farm products, as opposed to the type of cyber-hacking that Russia conducted in the 2016 U.S. elections.” Trump told reporters, “You have statements made [by the Chinese] that they were going to hit our farmers, those are my voters. ... I love the farmers, I’m taking care of the farmers. I’m opening up markets like nobody’s ever opened markets before.”

The Washington Post (9/26, Nakashima) says that “in a hastily-arranged press call on ‘Chinese interference,’ a senior administration official offered no examples of activity specifically constituting interference in the 2018 election,” but said that China has hurt “farmers and workers in states and districts that voted for the president because he stood up to the ways China has taken advantage of our country economically.” While CQ Roll Call (9/26, Bennett) says the official “provided scant examples of a Russia-style disinformation warfare campaign,” the Washington Examiner (9/26, Nelson) says “the senior official offered a broad critique of China, going beyond allegations of election-related interference.” The official “said China was responsible for ‘cyberbullying’ American scholars” and attempting to “stifle free speech on U.S. college campuses.” In addition, “he said China wrongfully penalizes critics by withholding travel visas.”

According to Bloomberg News (9/26) US national security officials “are on high alert for attempted election interference by a foreign adversary,” but “Russia has been seen as a more likely threat than China.” Bloomberg says that on September 12, DNI Coats said

China is “one of several countries with ‘capabilities; to interfere in the elections,” but added, “it’s more than Russia here that we’re looking at,” and “he didn’t allege that Beijing had taken any action.”

Mitchell also said on NBC Nightly News 📺 (9/26, story 6, 1:45, Holt) that Chinese Foreign Minister Wang Yi, who was present for Trump’s remarks, is “strongly denying” the President’s accusations. Fox News’ Special Report 📺 (9/26) showed Wang saying, “We did not and will not interfere in any country’s domestic affairs. We refuse to accept any unwarranted accusations against China.”

Regarding Trump’s assertion, Roll Call’s Niels Lesniewski tweeted, “Um, so. It is almost 10 p.m., so safe to say, I reached out to the intel community about this when @realDonaldTrump said it. Got nothing back.”

US B-52s Flew Over South China Sea Last Week. Reuters (9/26, Ali) reports that US B-52 bombers flew “in the vicinity of the South China Sea this week” in “a move that is likely to cause anger in Beijing amid heightened tensions between the two countries.” According to Reuters, “Such flights are common, but usually upset Beijing. In June, China’s foreign ministry said no military ship or aircraft could scare China away from its resolve to protect its territory after two U.S. Air Force B-52 bombers flew near disputed islands in the South China Sea.”

WSJournal Details China’s Systematic Extraction Of US Firms’ Technologies. Citing interviews with corporate and government officials in the US and China and a review of regulatory and other documents, the Wall Street Journal (9/26, A1, Wei, Davis) reports that China’s removal of technology from US companies has become systematic.

Ip: Some See Developing Economic Cold War Between US, China. Greg Ip writes in the Wall Street Journal (9/26) that some see an economic cold war developing between the US and China. Ip adds that some believe that the US goal is not to find a negotiated solution with China but two permanently disengage the two nations’ economies.

Trump Doubles Down: Allegations Against Kavanaugh “A Big, Fat Con Job.”

President Trump on Wednesday addressed the allegations against Judge Kavanaugh during an afternoon press conference. In his remarks, the President once again accused Senate Democrats of being behind the spate of accusations. NBC Nightly News 📺 (9/26, lead story, 3:35, Alexander) showed Trump saying, “They know it’s a big, fat con job, and they go into a room, and I guarantee you, they laugh like hell. ... You have this other con artist, [Michael] Avenatti, come out with another beauty today. These are false accusations.” The CBS Evening News 📺 (9/26, lead story, 5:00, Glor) noted Trump also said, “What they’ve done to this family, what they’ve done to these children, these beautiful children of his, and what they’ve done to his wife. And they know it’s a big, fat con job, so it wouldn’t have mattered if the FBI came back with the cleanest score, and you understand that very well,” that “if they would have come back with the most perfect, we found everything, and he’s perfectly innocent of everything, it wouldn’t have made a difference. You wouldn’t have gotten one vote.”

Another NBC Nightly News 📺 (9/26, story 4, 1:50, Holt) segment showed Trump being asked whether all Kavanaugh accusers are liars. Said the President, “I can’t tell you. I have to watch tomorrow. I just heard about one a little while ago. I can tell you her lawyer is a low life, okay? I can’t tell you whether or not they are liars until I hear them. I’ll be watching. Believe it or not, I’m going to see what is said. It’s possible that they will be convincing. Now, with all of that being said,” Kavanaugh “has been for many years one of the most respected people in Washington. Every single person knows him, a lot of people know him well, and those people don’t believe what’s going on. I can always be convinced. I have to hear it.”

ABC World News Tonight 📺 (9/26, lead story, 5:05, Karl) showed Trump saying, “People are going to have to make a decision. Thirty-six years, there’s no charge. All of a sudden, the hearings are over and the rumors start coming out. The senators are very capable people, they’re very good people. I know many of them, they’re friends of mine. These are very talented, very good people. They’re going to have to believe what they believe.”

The New York Times (9/26, Shear) points out that while he said the allegations against Kavanaugh "are all false," Trump also told reporters "he 'can always be convinced' after watching the testimony of Dr. Christine Blasey Ford." The Times goes on to call Trump's press conference "rambling and combative."

Jake Tapper said of Trump's remarks on CNN's Situation Room 📺 (9/26), "I think he did himself no favors when it came to the idea of supporting Kavanaugh. He did, a few times during this press conference, say things to try to suggest that he had an open mind about it, he wants to hear, he could be persuaded. But I think overwhelmingly the idea was this is a con job, these women are lying, their accusations are false, I don't believe it. ... He painted this picture of sexual assault as if it is just a world full of women waiting to make false accusations against men and none of them are accurate, none of them are true."

Jeff Zeleny said on CNN's The Lead 📺 (9/26). "The President is taking the confirmation battle to the court of public opinion. He is growing increasingly dissatisfied with how Kavanaugh has defended himself, CNN has learned, telling one official the Judge seemed wooden and not sufficiently aggressive in his Fox News interview this week."

CNBC's Christina Wilkie tweeted, "All signs today point to Trump's having abandoned Kavanaugh. He's speaking about Kavanaugh in the past tense, calling them 'very serious charges,' and musing about choosing another Supreme Court nominee." Politico's Annie Karni tweeted, "It was a typical Trumpian move, leaving his final position unclear – a frustrating exercise for Team Kavanaugh and Senate Republicans akin to nailing Jell-O to a wall."

Trump Says If He Nominated George Washington, Democrats Would Be Against Him. Politico (9/26, Shamon) notes that during his press conference, the President also said, "Look, if we brought George Washington here and we said, 'We have George Washington,' the Democrats would vote against him." Trump went on to quip, "He may have had some – I think – accusations made. Didn't he have a couple of things in his past? George Washington would be voted against 100 percent by [Senate Minority Leader] Schumer and the con artists. One hundred percent. One hundred percent. So it really doesn't matter from their standpoint."

Trump: GOP Senators "Could Not Be More Respectful" Of Ford. Politico (9/26, Morin) reports that "Trump on Wednesday praised the way Senate Republicans have handled sexual assault allegations against...Kavanaugh, saying GOP lawmakers 'could not be more respectful' to accuser Christine Blasey Ford." Said Trump, "I think the Senate, the Republicans could not be nicer in the way they're handling this. ... They could have pushed it through 2 1/2 weeks ago and you wouldn't be talking about it right now, which is frankly what I would have preferred, but they didn't do that." CQ Roll Call (9/26, Bennett) notes Trump also said, "I think I might have pushed it ahead a lot faster."

To Breitbart (9/26, Spiering), meanwhile, "Trump said Wednesday that Republicans on the Senate Judiciary Committee should have forced a vote to confirm...Kavanaugh sooner."

Trump Says Dealing With Past "False Charges" Against Him Gives Him Unique Perspective On Kavanaugh Saga. The CBS Evening News 📺 (9/26, lead story, 5:00, Glor) noted Trump asked how the past allegations of sexual impropriety affect his reaction to the Kavanaugh charges, the President said, "Well, it does impact my opinion, you know why? Because I've had a lot of false charges made against me. I'm a very famous person, unfortunately. I've been a famous person for a long time. But I've had a lot of false charges made against me. Really false charges. I know friends that have false charges. People want fame. They want money. They want whatever. So when I see it, I view it differently than somebody sitting home watching television where they say, oh, judge Kavanaugh this or that. It's happened to me many times."

ABC's Vega: Trump's Comment On Presumption Of Innocence An "Astounding Moment." ABC World News Tonight 📺 (9/26, lead story, 5:05, Karl) reported "the President was also asked what message he's sending to young men across this country by defending judge Kavanaugh so strongly, even before he hears from Dr. Ford." ABC's

Cecilia Vega added, "This is the message to young men President Trump is sending. Quote: 'When you are guilty until proven innocent, it's not supposed to be that way.' He just called this a dangerous period in our country, a powerful cultural moment. I've got to tell you...this was an astounding moment in covering this presidency. More than an hour and 20 minutes, more than a dozen different topics covered. This was supposed to be...Trump making his case for his nominee ahead of tomorrow's hearing. The question" is: "Did he help or did he hurt him?"

Breitbart (9/26, Spiering) notes "Trump said that he grew up hearing the phrase 'innocent until proven guilty,' suggesting that it was the proper application of justice in America," and "said that the allegations of sexual misconduct against Kavanaugh set a different standard by his enemies because he was nominated to the Supreme Court." Said Trump, "I think that's a very very dangerous standard for our country."

According to a Washington Post (9/26, Rucker, Costa, Dawsey, Parker) analysis, however, "Trump's expansive argument cast doubt on the credibility not only of the three women who have accused Kavanaugh of sexual assault, but also on scores of other women who have claimed sexual abuse by prominent men, including the president himself." With "his defiant rush to rescue Kavanaugh's nomination, Trump effectively sought to draw a line in the sand against the growing number of allegations that have felled male authority figures in politics, the media and business."

Rep. Pramila Jayapal (D-WA) tweeted, "The most truthful thing Trump has ever said: Trump laments #MeToo as 'very dangerous' for powerful men". Washington Post conservative blogger Jennifer Rubin tweeted, "Defending Kavanaugh, Trump laments #MeToo as 'very dangerous' for powerful men... can't get anything by that guy. Yes, the age of unchallenged rich guy privilege is drawing to an end".

Fed Touts Strong Economy, Signals Intent To Continue Raising Rates Into 2020.

The AP (9/26, Crutsinger) reports that the Federal Reserve "signaled its confidence Wednesday in the US economy by raising a key interest rate for a third time this year, forecasting another rate hike before year's end and predicting that it will continue to tighten credit into 2020 to manage growth and inflation." In a statement "after its latest policy meeting, the Fed dropped phrasing it had long used that characterized its policy as 'accommodative' – that is, favoring low rates." According to the AP, the Fed "had used variations of that pledge in the seven years that it kept its key rate at a record low near zero and over the past nearly three years in which it's gradually tightened credit."

Reuters (9/26, Schneider, Lange) reports that Fed Chair Jerome Powell "said the removal of the wording, which had been a staple of the central bank's guidance for financial markets and households for much of the past decade, did not signal a policy outlook change. 'Instead, it is a sign that policy is proceeding in line with our expectations,'" said Powell.

Under the headline "Fed Raises Rates Again, Citing 'Particularly Bright' Economic Moment," the New York Times (9/26, Appelbaum) reports that the Fed "repeatedly described economic conditions as 'strong' in a statement following a two-day meeting of its Federal Open Market Committee. ... 'Economic activity has been rising at a strong rate,' the statement said, adding that job growth, and the growth of household spending and business investment, were also robust." Jim Tankersley of the New York Times tweeted, "Notably, Fed officials still expect fiscal stimulus to fade / growth to slow in 2020 and beyond. No sign yet that they believe in sustained supply side effects from tax cuts."

Politico (9/26, Guida) says the Fed is "projecting that US economic growth will exceed 3 percent this year in a vindication of President Donald Trump," and USA Today (9/26, Davidson) that "the economy has been cruising lately and so the Fed is tapping on the brakes once again" while "upgrading its economic outlook." Said Powell, "Our economy is strong, growth is running at a healthy clip, unemployment is low. ... This is a good moment for the US economy." Axios (9/26, Brown) runs a similar story under the headline "Fed Hikes Interest Rates Amid Booming Economy," while the Los Angeles Times (9/26, Puzzanghera), Bloomberg News (9/26, Condon, Torres), Breitbart (9/26, Carney) and Wall Street Journal (9/26, Timiraos), among other news outlets, also report the story.

The Washington Post (9/26, Long) also reports that the Fed “stressed repeatedly that the US economy is “strong” across the board and no longer needs the heavy stimulus the central bank put into place during the Great Recession.” The Post notes that the decision “increases the federal funds rate from a range of 1.75 percent to 2 percent to a range of 2 percent to 2.25 percent, the highest level in a decade.”

In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (9/26) notes that the Fed is growing more optimistic about GDP growth – hiking their estimates for the fourth month in a row.

Media Analyses: Trump Reveled In “Freewheeling” News Conference.

Several news outlets run colorful analyses of what the AP (9/26) calls President Trump’s “freewheeling” Wednesday news conference. The AP says Trump “dismissed as ‘fake news’ reports that he was laughed at during his speech to the U.N. General Assembly, said he wanted Rod Rosenstein to remain in his Justice Department job, said he rejected a one-on-one meeting with the Canadian prime minister, and accused China of interfering in the 2018 midterm election.”

The New York Times (9/26, Grynbaum) reports that the President “doubted the character of George Washington (‘Didn’t he have a couple things in his past?’), urged a wire-service reporter to ask a tough question (‘Give it to me, Reuters!’) and referred to a Kurdish correspondent as ‘Mr. Kurd.’” The Times writes that while Trump “denounces news organizations as ‘the enemy of the people,’” he “made clear that he is never more comfortable, never more engaged, than when he is sparring with the news media that he loves to say he hates. ... ‘I could be doing this all day long,’ Mr. Trump said happily, after an hour of challenging, cajoling, teasing and shouting down the reporters in the room.” The Washington Post (9/26, Parker) says that “an animated Trump delivered bluster, falsehoods, insults, breaking news and, as he quipped at one point, more than a hint of his trademark “braggadocios.” But what was perhaps most remarkable was just how transparent and revealing Trump continues to be.”

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

“We Know How To Conquer Tuberculosis.” The New York Times (9/26) editorializes that the World Health Organization’s “newest treatment guidelines now include a strong recommendation that all people living in households where one person has active tuberculosis receive preventive treatment. If countries implement that guideline, and if doctors abide by it, some 30 million more people should have access to preventive care in the next five years.” If that happens, the Times says, “a disease that has plagued the world’s most vulnerable people for far too long could finally be wiped out.”

“Hit Pause On Brett Kavanaugh.” A New York Times (9/26) editorial says that with a third accuser of Supreme Court nominee Brett Kavanaugh stepping forward, “this destructive stampede of a confirmation, driven so far by partisan calculation, needs to yield at last to common sense: Let qualified investigators – the F.B.I. – do their job.”

Washington Post.

“The Senate Can’t Handle This. The FBI Can.” The Washington Post (9/26) argues in an editorial Thursday’s hearing of the Senate Judiciary Committee “would not be a fair substitute for an FBI investigation into [Supreme Court nominee Brett] Kavanaugh’s behavior with women during high school and college,” and the latest accusation from Julie Swetnick “only enhances the case for pausing while professionals gather what facts exist.”

“Poland Suggested Naming A Fort After Trump. Will That Really Improve Its Relations With The United States?” In an editorial, the Washington Post (9/26) says Polish President Andrzej Duda, lobbying for the establishment of a permanent US military base in Poland, said it would be named for President Trump. Says the Post, “Promising to call a base Fort Trump, whether in jest or not, may have won the Polish government some sympathetic words from the president at the United Nations. Whether it will serve the country's interests, and US-Polish relations, in the longer run is very much open to question."

"A 74-Year-Old Was Left In A Burned Down Building For Five Days. How?" The Washington Post (9/26) editorializes that last Wednesday morning, "hours after fire broke out at a senior housing complex in Southeast Washington, a member of the company that manages the property delivered the news that all the elderly residents had been accounted for," but "we now know that was not correct." Raymond Holton, 74, "languished alone for five days in his apartment in the fire-damaged building before he was discovered by chance." The Post adds, "it is clear there were errors – if not sheer incompetence – in the actions of those, public and private, charged with safeguarding these elderly and vulnerable people," and "there were also reports that smoke detectors and sprinklers failed to fully operate, which raises its own set of troubling questions about how the complex was managed, how the city provided oversight and whether there is cause to be concerned about other properties geared toward seniors."

Wall Street Journal.

"Democrats Endorse Avenatti." In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (9/26) calls the latest allegations against Supreme Court nominee Brett Kavanaugh particularly hard to believe, arguing that type of routine, mass rapes would have surely come to the attention of the authorities at some point over the last decades. Moreover, by her own admission, Kavanaugh's accuser would have continued to attend the parties after being raped. Yet, says the Journal, within hours of the allegations becoming public every Democratic member of the Senate Judiciary Committee used them to ask that Kavanaugh withdraw his nomination – this lending them credence.

"The Fed Gets Optimistic." In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (9/26) notes that the Fed is growing more optimistic about GDP growth – hiking their estimates for the fourth month in a row.

"Silicon Valley's Supreme Salvation." The Wall Street Journal (9/26) says in an editorial that tech firms should hope for the confirmation of Brett Kavanaugh, creating a conservative majority on the Supreme Court. The Journal cites an attempted class-action suit against Uber by drivers who sought to be treated as regular employees, writing that the effort failed only because a conservative three-judge panel of the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals drew the case. Conservative judges, the Journal argues, will protect tech firms from frivolous cases.

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

Conan O'Brien: "Big hearings for potential Supreme Court Justice Brett Kavanaugh...start tomorrow. Everyone is wondering what's going to happen and a lot of stuff happening at the last minute. For his defense, Brett Kavanaugh submitted into evidence his summer of 1982 calendar. So far, the only thing that it proves about Kavanaugh is he's a weird freak who keeps calendars from 1982."

Conan O'Brien: In his calendar, Kavanaugh "mentions seeing movies like Rocky III and Grease II. I think this hurts his credibility because what idiot would leave hard evidence that they saw Grease II?"

Conan O'Brien: "Trump spoke at the UN yesterday. Analysts say President Trump treated his UN speech yesterday as if he was at one of his rallies. ... Trump said his favorite part was getting the crowd to chant, 'Lock her up' in 17 different languages."

Conan O'Brien: "President Trump has a brand new technologically upgraded presidential limousine. It's supposed to be very fancy with all the latest technology. For Trump's protection, the limo comes with bulletproof windows and no Twitter."

Trevor Noah: "Today, President Trump chaired a meeting of the UN Security Council and the good news is he now believes that foreign countries do meddle in US elections. The bad news is he only cares if he thinks it will hurt him. ... This is genius. You realize that Trump is basically saying that if he gets crushed in the midterms, it's not because he's bad, it's because he's so good, China had to do something about it."

Trevor Noah: "No one knows where he got this hacking claim from. He could have gotten it from the CIA or maybe he just got a fortune cookie he didn't like."

Trevor Noah: "The big story today, like every day before it, stretching as far back as I can remember, is Brett Kavanaugh. ... Honestly it feels like at this point, we have all received lifetime appointments to the story."

Jimmy Kimmel: "This afternoon, Donald Trump treated the media gathered in New York to a rambling, angry, jumbled, dishonest, and frequently incoherent hour-and-20-minute-long press conference. ... The wheels are off the wagon. It's time to put Grandpa in an assisted living facility because he cannot care for himself. What a performance this was. It was like the craziest voice mail from your mom ever."

Jimmy Kimmel: "This press conference was successful only in that he did not physically melt or explode during it."

Jimmy Kimmel: "Brett Kavanaugh seems to be backing off his claim on Fox News that he was a model student. In his prepared testimony today, he wrote, 'In retrospect, I said and did things in high school that make me cringe now.' In retrospect, you said things on Fox News three days ago that should make you cringe now."

Jimmy Kimmel: "All three accusers want the FBI to investigate their claims. Republicans, Brett Kavanaugh, don't want the FBI to investigate. I wonder why that is. At this point, Donald Trump has to be like, 'I knew we should have gone with Judge Judy.'"

Jimmy Kimmel: "For now, anyway, Trump is standing by his man. He said, 'Brett Kavanaugh is an absolute gem.' It's weird that Donald Trump has shown more affection for Brett Kavanaugh this week than he has for Eric and Don Jr. in really all of their entire lives."

Stephen Colbert: "The top story is still about Supreme Court nominee and man counting his accusers, Brett Kavanaugh. ... This morning, we learned new allegations against Kavanaugh from a woman named Julie Swetnick, and she says that back in high school, she 'attended well over ten parties where Kavanaugh was present and saw him drink excessively at many of these parties and engage in abusive and physically aggressive behavior towards girls.' Now, do we want someone on the Supreme Court who treated women this way, even in high school? I'm not sure we want someone who even attended 10 parties in high school. We want nerds."

Jimmy Fallon: "If this all goes well, I might get as many laughs as Trump's speech at the UN."

Jimmy Fallon: "After UN diplomats laughed at his speech yesterday, President Trump said that it was supposed to be funny. Basically Trump is that guy who trips in front of everyone and then tries to turn it into a tiny jog."

Jimmy Fallon: "After a toast at the UN, Trump was spotted drinking Diet Coke out of a wine glass, but only after sniffing a sample and swirling it around first."

Jimmy Fallon: "I read that Trump just got a new $1.5 million limo. It fires tear gas, has night vision, and can lay down an oil slick to make anyone chasing it spin out of control. Even crazier, Melania's bedroom door does the exact same thing."

James Corden: "A third woman has now come forward accusing Brett Kavanaugh of sexual misconduct during his time in high school. That's three accusers, or as Republicans call it, 'three strikes and you are voted in for a lifetime appointment.'"

James Corden: "These accusations are disgusting. This is not how a Supreme Court justice behaves. It's how the President of the United States behaves, but not a Supreme Court justice."

James Corden: Trump's press conference Wednesday "was absolutely surreal. Trump even wrapped things up by saying he wanted to get out on a high note, the way – and I'm not making this up – Elton John does at a concert. What? This is a press conference. This is crazy. Although at that point, Trump could have put on a sequined jacket and launched into a rendition of "Crocodile Rock" and it still wouldn't have been the weirdest part of that press conference."

James Corden: "Is there any way that President Trump and Elton John can just switch places? Because if there is anyone who should be on a farewell tour right now, it should be Donald Trump."

Seth Meyers: "The Secret Service's new presidential limo cost $1.5 million and reportedly includes features such as the ability to electrify door handles to shock anyone trying to get inside. 'What if you're trying to get out?' asked one woman."
